

WARNED AGAINST YELLOW PRESS

Bishop McFaul Urges Catholics to Assist in Wiping Out the Vicious, Sensational Newspapers.

Parts of Bishop McFaul's pastoral letter just issued were read at all the masses at St. Peter's, Sacred Heart and St. John's German Catholic church yesterday.

At St. Peter's Church the part treating of the press was read. A substance of this message, which is one of the fifteen subjects treated in the pastoral letter and which was announced yesterday, is as follows:

Periodicals, pamphlets and newspapers are the literature of millions at the present day—the daily newspaper, however, enjoys the largest patronage. We must have the news warm at our breakfast table every morning. No doubt a newspaper is a potent factor for good or evil, and America publishes some excellent newspapers.

The bishop urges the subscription to Catholic newspapers and magazines, and states that a small library of religious books should be in the possession of every home. He refers to the vulgar sheets, which he terms purveyors of uncleanness, reeking with nastiness, which are so largely read and quoted the words of St. Paul to the Gentiles, "But all uncleanness—let it not so much as be named among you, as becometh saints; or obscenity, or foolish talking, or scurrility, which is to no purpose."

The letter continues that all the power of the holy office will be utilized in stemming the flood of corruption and impious Catholic papers to banish such papers and books in order that they may not contaminate the home.

$4,000 Local People Spent That Much at the Japanese Auction Sale Just Closed.

The auction sale of the Japan Fair Association, which began in this city a few weeks ago, was brought to a successful close at 54 Church street, on Saturday evening.

Goods disposed of were those which were on hand from the Jamestown Exposition and which the promoters of the Japanese goods termed "a frost." They consisted of some very fine pieces which brought good prices from lovers of art in this city.

M. L. Williamson was the auctioneer. Many handsome rugs, the texture of some being as soft as the hide of a fawn and indescribably delicate in color, sold for hundreds of dollars and the bidding was spirited, too.

With the rugs, which brought good prices on Saturday, were sold many pieces of antique Japanese objects of art, specimens of carved jade, agate, rock crystal, ivory, carvings of merit, carved mahogany chairs and other perfections of the Flowery Kingdom.

A local woman is reported to have paid as high as $175 for a large amphora, or wine receptacle of a peach bloom design. The amphora is of the Kang-hai period and is invested with a monochrome glaze to illustrate a ripening peach. A number of bronzes brought high prices.

It is estimated that about $4,000 was spent by local people during the auction.

NEAL DOW, APOSTLE OF PROHIBITION

G. Wilfred Pearce Corrects Some Errors About Maine's Illustrious Son—Interesting Discourse on Temperance.

To the Editor of the Home News: A retired army officer in Middlesex county who is interested in a celebration of the anniversary of the birth of Neal Dow, the Apostle of Prohibition, on March 26, asked the writer herewith to correct a number of errors in a pamphlet about Neal Dow and the Maine Liquor laws which has been largely circulated in New Jersey.

Among the errors in the pamphlet are the statements that Dow "was a reformer drunkard, and that the police court records of Portland exhibit that he was once arrested and fined for selling rum."

The present writer has no interest in the question of liquor sale regulation. But as one who saw much of Major General Neal Dow in affairs connected with the organization of military officers for Eastern daily papers, I am able to correct the errors which this former officer of the Army of the Potomac, now in Middlesex county draws attention.

Neal Dow was not the father of the Maine anti-liquor law. He never said that he was. The first law of that kind was passed by a legislature that was Democratic in both branches, and was signed by a Democratic Governor. Neal Dow was at first a Whig, afterwards a Republican, and finally a Prohibitionist. He never used alcoholic beverages nor tobacco. He worked as much to stop the use of profane and obscene language as in other forms of reform.

He never sold rum. When he was Mayor of Portland, sometime after the passage of the first anti-liquor law, he seized a lot of rum from a saloon whose owners defied the law. A writ of replevin was issued. Dow refused to deliver the spirits. His political enemies then caused his arrest on the charge of having these liquors in his possession. Dow won the case. The next night a mob was raised among the millers of the report and attempts were made to beat in the doors of the room in which the seized liquors were held. Mayor Neal Dow ordered the militia out. He then faced the mob alone and read the riot act. The mob refused to disperse and advanced toward the city hall whereupon the soldiers fired and one man was killed and a number wounded. The front of my grandfather's store was blown in by the volleys, and he was badly wounded.

That was the last liquor law riot in Maine. Agitation for prohibition in Maine began before the district became a State. Maine is the only northern State in the draughting of a Constitution for which the illustrious Thomas Jefferson had a part. Maine's constitution, under the name of "The Constitution," was wholly written by Thomas Jefferson. It applies to schools, academies and colleges. He had the idea to make a very high liquor license law and apply the proceeds to educational purposes.

This advice was not followed. The very first prohibition law in Maine applied only to the tribes of Passamaquoddy and Penobscot Indians, who at the same time were encouraged by the passage of bounty laws giving them so much a bushel for raising grain, potatoes, etc. These good laws exist as originally passed, and have been honestly enforced, so that Maine has to-day about a thousand Indians living under the good laws passed by their white friends. Neal Dow was a member of the Society of Friends, and was of unmixed English blood. The law of the persistence of species was strikingly illustrated in his person. He was a fine specimen of the dauntless Saxon ready to face all obstacles for the advancement of his ideas of right.

Neal Dow was one of the early anti-slavery workers in Eastern New England. He rescued a number of negroes from slavery and put them in ways to work out their best interests. At the beginning of his consecration to the work of prohibition, he carried on a large tannery and was highly profitable. In the spirit in which Peter and Andrew laid down their nets and followed Jesus, so Neal Dow laid down his material interests and from that day forward through nearly sixty years he has never wavered in the war against the liquor traffic.

He was a plain, blunt man. Nothing of the orator was about him. He had something to say; said it; stopped. He never resorted to abuse or pathos or funny stories. He dealt with facts—nothing but facts. He hated all things that to him were sins—but he loved the sinners. When he raised a regiment to go to the Civil War it was largely made up of men who had fought his battles and he loved them. But they loved them, and for his true nobility and godly courage. He led those men on many a bloody field. This regiment, the 13th Maine Infantry, became a "cool water regiment."

It had a reputation like that of the South Jersey regiment, mostly made up of Methodists and Baptists and Presbyterians, which was known by both armies as "The Die No More's." They always went into battle singing the hymn "I am going home to die no more."

Dow became a Major-General, and among other experiences, was captured and put into Libby Prison, where he succeeded in inducing President Davis to allow friends of the prisoners in the North to send in food, clothing, and medicines, which Dow distributed—all but the wines and the spirits—which he would not distribute. Dow was exchanged for Major-General Fitz Hugh Lee. In conclusion, Neal Dow was never able to get the Prohibition laws in his native State which he wanted. As a matter of fact, Maine has never had an anti-liquor law except for the protection of Indians, which was not as full of holes as a skimmer. Maine in its corporate capacity has for many years sold wines, malt beverages and spirits through the legal liquor stores. Consequently, the lawful liquor selling in Maine is a State monopoly.

For the last forty years, about seventy-five per cent. of the population of Maine has favored absolute prohibition. But by the lavish use of corruption money by the associated liquor interests every bill designed to make prohibition prohibit has been bedeviled. There are many Prohibition Democrats in Maine, and likewise many high license Republicans. In a number of counties not a drop of liquor can be had at taverns, drug stores, or elsewhere. In other counties the laws, imperfect as they are, are openly defied. But all the same, no reformer of our time ever met with the degree of success that has followed the work of Neal Dow.

His movement has covered the world with Prohibitionists. State pride is very great in Maine. Dow was loved and honored by men and women there who never approved his anti-liquor laws. Ideas and these loyal in going to settle in the West and the South, and wherever that constant stream of migration has been flowing from Maine for fifty years took with them, in almost all cases, a disposition to work for a small or a great measure of the gospel of prohibition as preached by Dow.

This same degree of State pride exists in Maine for Major-General Alford S. Daggett, U. S. A., who commanded the expeditionary force to China, and who fought in fifty battles in the Civil War. Daggett is the foremost fighter against the restoration of the Army Canteen. Last Summer he held a meeting in Portland to voice his ideas against canteens. The regular army band was there; the officers and men of the garrisons of Portland's three forts were there; the ladies of the regular army were there, and every member of the Grand Army of the Republic for miles around and their wives and daughters were there.

Some of us were not at all interested in the canteen question. We were there to cheer and honor "Good and Beautiful Ours," who had fought for the Stars and Stripes alongside of the fathers and the uncles and the grandfathers of many of us, that "Government of the people, by the people, and for the people, should not perish," as Lincoln said at Gettysburg.

There is one important reason why Maine has been so nobly served by her illustrious sons and daughters—said that is because the people of Maine have always been loyal to the men and women who advanced the interests of the State. Neal Dow lives honored in the memory of hundreds of thousands of Maine born people who did not wholly agree with his ideas about the liquor traffic, because he was an inspirer to the race in the noble rivalry of noble deeds to which Saint Paul called the world.

Despite the financial pressure of late, the factory at Milltown has been working day and night in an effort to get ahead with orders on hand. Over a thousand men are employed at the factory now and more are being taken on daily.

The company expects to open salesrooms in connection with the New York branch at 128 Broadway, and the operations of the salesrooms will extend to other cities in the auto quarter wherein the new branch store is to be located.

The salesrooms of the Michelin Company throughout the United States will be the same. The colors of the signs of the company will be blue and yellow.

Reception Tendered to Miss Elizabeth Breazeale by Mrs. R. W. Prentiss.

A most delightful birthday reception was tendered to Miss Elizabeth Breazeale, of Hamlet, in honor of her thirteenth birthday by her aunt, Mrs. R. W. Prentiss, of Highland Park, on Saturday afternoon.

Games were enjoyed and the little guests danced the Virginia Reel, after which the guests were seated before the festive board upon which reposed the birthday cake, illumined with thirteen lighted candles, and other delicacies. The happiness that radiated from the fourteen little faces as they partook of the refreshments can only be imagined.

The young hostess presided with grace and dignity and cut the fabled anniversary cake with mathematical accuracy.

At six o'clock the guests departed one by one leaving behind congratulations and the wishes for many returns of the day.

Among those present were: Misses Elizabeth Davis, Florence Speyers, Alice Barbour, Margaret and Ingrid Nelson, Esther Sears, Alma Chamberlain, Elizabeth Lewis, Ella Halstead, Carl and Lanson Prentiss, Richard Nelson and Frederick Perry, of New York City.

An Attractive Recital Under the Auspices of the Teachers' Club.

We were swayed as rarely before by the will of a Natural Artist."

Mr. C. T. Kilborne, President of the Orange, N. J. Y. M. C. A., where the same Entertainment was given, says, "That 'Dickens' 'Tale of Two Cities' as rendered by Prof. Barbour is a masterpiece of elocution and cannot be excelled."

TOWN TALK

By Priscilla

Friday, the thirteenth, seems to come around more often of late. This unlucky combination of dates came in September and again in December of 1907, and it was here again last week. Previous to last September it had not occurred since July 13, 1906, and it will not come again until November of this year. Superstitious souls shuddered in fear all day Friday, yet nothing of a particularly harrowing nature happened, and once again the time-honored bogey was given a setback. Still, there are thousands of people who believe in the hoodoo and when the 13th of the month falls on Friday, they will take particular care not to look at the moon over their left shoulder, walk under a ladder or drop a knife at the table. Some will even remain indoors, for fear something will happen.

"Mamma, I don't want my doctor any more. I want George Washington to make me well again; now, then," said a very angry little New street Miss the other day, after having been kept in the house for 14 days with the measles. "George Washington? Why, George Washington is no doctor," answered the surprised mother. "I want him anyhow," insisted the impatient little girl. "This doctor what we got say I can go out to-morrow, and to-morrow he say Saturday, and Saturday he say Sunday, and then he say to-morrow again. He doesn't tell the truth."

PLEASANT ANTICIPATIONS

Of something good to follow are always inspired by the very first impression of goods that have been returned cleaned and dyed.

With the arrival of the season when the buds are ready to burst with all their springtime glory, comes the summons to the lady of the house that she must prepare for housecleaning. This means that all curtains, portieres and blankets must be cleaned, replaced, or laid away.

The Steam Dyeing Patent, Cleaning and Parisian Laundry at 84 Church street, make a specialty of this art. We charge nothing for being goods and the same are as vigilantly guarded as diplomatic intrigues while in our possession.

"Mourning garments, in wool, silk or cotton, with or without trimmings, of all mixed goods, or uniform, made into a beautiful fast black. No ripping or seams.
